Exposition des photo/cards de Roy Arenella

J'ai définitivement manqué l'exposition qui a lieu du 6 mars au 12 avril à la Galerie Opalka, à Albany, NY. Cependant, Geof Huth y est allé lors du vernissage et a rapporté sur son blog (ou plutôt sur un de ses nombreux blogs), l'évènement. Je remercie Geof sincèrement pour m'avoir permis de reproduire ici son texte intégral en version originale anglaise et ainsi que quelques photographies. Vous pouvez consulter le blog de Geof Huth à l'adresse suivante: <http://dbqp.blogspot.com>.

I arrived at the photography exhibit in a jacket and tie and proceeded to explain that ties are de rigueur at exhibit openings. The exhibit was the 31st Annual Photography Region at the Opalka Gallery at the Sage College of Albany, and Nancy and I were there, particularly to see the work of our friend Roy Arenella, whom I greeted with a hearty, "Hello, Roymond." His wife Martine was also there, and we had an enjoyable chat while watching the people at the opening, particularly those who were captivated by the photo/cards of Roy's, which were suspended from the ceiling on long thin lines of filament.

These homemade photographs of Roy's are what drew me to this gallery on this night. First, I've seen exhibits of these in New York and Greenwich, New York, so I didn't want to miss out on seeing some of these exhibited in another city. Second, some of the cards were ones Roy made for and mailed to me, so these were on loan from me to the gallery. Third, and most importantly, these cards are the pinnacle of Roy's art, combining his skills with photography, calligraphy (after a fashion), and writing into little two-sided explorations of ideas that combine quotations from others, his own notes, visual poetic symbols, photographs, and quotations into unified artistic works that surprise with their power. And five of the cards twisting slowly, sometimes backwards and forwards, in place, on their filament, suspended from the ceiling were from the twenty I had chosen—meaning that there were more cards from me than from anyone else.

As we walked around the gallery, we enjoyed the other experiments in photography. Melinda McDaniel, created strange yet wonderful effects by taking photographs of exceedingly small sizes, no more than a few millimeters wide or tall, sometimes with the entire body of a person within it, and pinning them in profusion in place. There were many more photographs feet in height and width, including Laura Gail Tyler's photographs of created villages of sand houses giving way to the tides and paper houses burning down. The range of work and imagination was great. In a small theater, a stop-action film had tiny plastic animals walking within a toy house—and when the animals changed direction I let out a great guffaw, though even I was surprised I found the mere change of direction to be humorous. Eventually, titles arrived on the screen, along with Roy's name.

I was so taken by the display of Roy's photographs that I forgot entirely to take a picture of Roy. Instead, I have pictures of people interacting, sometimes quite dramatically, with his photo/cards. One man picked them out of the air and read them (my mail) before dropping them back into space.

I liked reading Roy's mail to me on fishing line and thought the presentation worked—to some degree. But most people didn't hold the photo/cards still to read them, so they missed many of the details, and it is the details (even the choice of stamp) that make the difference in an Arenella piece. By the end, though, the people fiddling with the photo-cards and walking past them enough to create wind currents causes the lines of dangling cards to entangle, and two women spent about a quarter of an hour cleaning up that almost invisible mess, which are the best messes of all.

les épaules des hommes
belles, fragiles

tous les hommes
vieillards, enfants
jeunes hommes et hommes vieillissant je les imagine
je voudrais leur dire :

leur demander : « voudriez vous pour moi dénuder votre épaule, pourriez vous le faire pour moi ? » « accepterais tu de baisser le col de ta chemise, enlever ton tee-shirt, déboutonner ta veste ? »

« pourrais-tu quelques minutes dévoiler la peau de tes épaules .ce petit espace entre le cou et le bras ? » je les vois caresser leur cou, leurs épaules ivres de fatigue

un geste doux, un geste fort ils baissent la tête ou la penche en arrière, glissent leurs mains dans leurs chemises tissu, peau, espace

un simple espace, un territoire, un continent pour moi

je voudrais voir les épaules des hommes
